

Ho‘opili: A New Trend In Sustainable Residential Development

In the past, residential development on Oahu focused primarily on one thing: building homes. Today, a new trend in residential development is emerging that focuses on more than just building homes, but also on creating balanced communities where key aspects of people's lives – where they live, shop, play, learn and gather with others – are fully integrated into a complete and sustainable development. Ho‘opili, a 1,600-acre development on the Ewa Plain, is envisioned as such a community.

Come and learn more about the Ho‘opili master planned community that will include up to 11,750 housing units, commercial developments, a rail transit station, and other community uses from Dean Uchida, Vice President, Ho‘opili, DR Horton, Schuler Division.
